HISTORICAL NOTE

Howe, Manning & Almy (HM&A) is best known as the first women's architectural firm founded in Boston and the second such in the country. The beginnings of the firm can be traced back to 1894 when Lois Lilley Howe started to receive commissions. The firm's commission numbers start at this time and are continuous until 1937 when the firm disbanded. In 1913 Howe asked Eleanor Manning O'Connor, one of her draftsmen, to be her partner; the firm of Lois Lilley Howe & Manning (LLH&M) resulted. The firm was successful and another draftsman from the office became a partner; Howe, Manning & Almy officially began on April 1, 1926. Since Mary Almy assumed responsibility for the business aspects of the firm, O'Connor focused on the technical architectural work and on design problems. Howe continued to concentrate on design and to guide her partners as the senior member of the firm. While HM&A continued for eleven more years, the Depression had an economic impact on the firm. The number of commissions decreased and the firm did more renovating than building during the 1930's. When Lois Lilley Howe retired at the age of seventy-three, on September 1, 1937, O'Connor and Almy started separate practices. The firm's connections did not dissolve, however; Howe occasionally worked for O'Connor's private practice.

Lois Lilley Howe's early work involved both the building and remodeling of houses. Throughout the firm's existence, this emphasis on domestic architecture continued. Most of their commissioned work was done on houses and the architects were well known for their ability to do renovations and alterations. The work was usually in the Colonial Revival style and the Georgian Revival style – a reflection of contemporary taste. HM&A did extensive research into the historical veracity of the revival styles by using measured drawings, photographs, postcards, and printed material. An example of their revival work is the Louis C. Cornish house, built in 1916 at 15 Fayerweather Street, the first Seventeenth Century Revival house in Cambridge.

Revival work was only one aspect of HM&A's interest in domestic architecture. During World War I, LLH&M began to concentrate on smaller, more efficient homes for middle-income families. Although the smaller house was a new concept, it was becoming a necessity. Development of smaller house designs was part of the architects' interest in urban housing problems. HM&A worked with the Architect's Small House Service throughout the 1920's and 1930's. The firm also submitted small house designs to the Department of the Interior for the Subsistence Homestead Communities, especially those in Massachusetts, and remodeled apartments for the Lynn Slum Clearance Project.

The architects received recognition for their contributions to housing throughout their careers. One of LLH&M's most prestigious commissions was for John Nolen, the town planner. He chose them to be among the architects commissioned to design houses for Mariemont, Ohio, one of the country's first planned communities. LLH&M designed the houses for Denny Place in Mariemont. These houses were built with stone from the area so that the buildings would blend into the environs and would be economical.

In 1913 McCall's magazine asked the firm to submit a design for their small house series. The design appeared in the March 1924 issue and a McCall's book compiled by Marcia Mead also included the plan. In 1926, HM&A won first prize in the Cape Cod Home Competition that the Cape Cod Real Estate Board sponsored. Because the small house was often used as a vacation home, HM&A was familiar with Cape Cod design. In fact, HM&A houses, including Cape Cods, were built throughout New England's summer resort areas. One of HM&A's first commissions after Mart Almy joined, was Mrs. Charles Almy's house, which later served as a temporary residence for Governor Ely. The Almy house was one of ten houses chosen from House Beautiful's Small House Competition. The plans appeared in the May 1929 issue and then were exhibited throughout the country.

Further published recognition came to the firm in the 1930's. The Frothingham house at 4 Grey Gardens, Cambridge, was included in an article titled "One Hundred Small Houses" in the October 1935 Architecture issue. The May 1937 issue of American Architect and Architecture showed the Lynn home of James Morgan that HM&A built.

HM&A designed such structures as the Army and Navy Canteen, a Fort Devens cafeteria, and a Liberty Bond Booth as part of the war effort. Some of their other commissions included factory alterations, plans for barns and stables, and even an ice house. In 1916, the Concord Art Association House was remodeled by LLH&M, and in the 1920's HM&A worked on the Art Center in Fitchburg. The architects also helped to plan both the Lynn Boy Scout Camp and the Fleur-de-Lis Camp. All three women were involved in many activities and they did architectural work for their clubs and schools, including the College Club, the Business Women's Club, M.I.T., Simmons College, and Radcliffe College.

BIOGRAPHIES

Mary Almy (1885-1967)

Mary Almy was born at Beverly Farms, Massachusetts, to Judge Charles Almy and Helen Jackson Cabot Almy. After graduating from Radcliffe College in 1905, Almy taught at the Boardman School in Cambridge until 1917 when she started to study architecture at M.I.T. Her course work was finished in 1920, although her S.B. degree was not awarded until 1922. Her thesis was titled "Design for an Office Building." After M.I.T., Almy worked in London at the architectural firm of Collcut and Hamp for two years. When she returned to the United States, she was a draftsman for Ellwell and Rachall and for Lois Lilley Howe and Manning (LLH&M). She was also associated with the Small House Service Bureau of House Beautiful for a short time.

Mary Almy became partners with Lois Lilley Howe and Eleanor Manning O'Connor in 1926, the same year that she was admitted to the American Institute of Architects. She assumed responsibility for much of the correspondence and other business matters when she joined the firm. Mary Almy's family connections helped to gain commissions for the firm. For example, many of the houses at the Almy vacation complex in Cotuit were designed by HM&A.

After HM&A disbanded, Mary Almy went into architectural practice with Henrietta Pope, a landscape architect. She later started a private practice in her own home. Almy's other activities gradually superseded her architectural work. During World War II, she served as an administrator for the Red Cross. From 1947 until 1949, she was social secretary to Rebecca Bradford, wife of Governor R. F. Bradford, during his term in office.

Mary Almy was active in many clubs and organizations, such as the Cambridge Historical Society, the Cambridge Social Dramatic Club, and the M.I.T. Women's Association. After working on the Membership Committee, she was the College Club's director from 1932 to 1934. For ten years, starting in 1938, she served as secretary to the Board of the Cambridge Center for Adult Education. Her most active participation was with Radcliffe alumnae. In 1933, she designed the Radcliffe Booth for the Century of Progress building at the International Exposition in Chicago. Three years later she helped to create the Radcliffe Exhibit for the Harvard Tercentary. Throughout her life she remained active with Radcliffe alumnae; in 1961, she served on the board of the Radcliffe Quarterly.

Other personal papers of Mary Almy can be found at the Schlesinger Library of Radcliffe College, where the Almy Family Papers are housed.

Lois Lilley Howe (1864-1964)

Lois Lilley Howe was born into the Cambridge family of Dr. Estes and Lois Lilly White Howe. Before entering the Museum School of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts in 1892, she earned an equivalency certificate from the Cambridge Public High School. At the Museum School, Howe concentrated in design, finishing the program in 1886. Her later architectural work reflected this artistic training, and she maintained contacts with artists throughout her life. She became a member of the Copley Society of Boston, an association of artists, in 1883. She joined the Council of the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in 1897; later the Museum School named her an annual "Visitor to the School." She also served as director of the Boston Society of Arts and Crafts from 1916 to 1919.

As a result of her alteration on a stairway for the Reverend Francis G. Peabody's home, she gained the admiration of architect Robert Swain Peabody, and he became her mentor. In 1888, she entered M.I.T.'s School of Architecture and took the course in "Partial Architecture" which lasted only two years. During this time, she was a founding member of Eta Sigma Mu; this sorority later became Cleofan.

With Peabody's help Lois Lilley Howe was hired as a draftsman with the firm of Allen and Kenway after finishing at M.I.T. Peabody also told her of the competition for a Women's Building at the Columbian Exhibition of 1893 in Chicago. She and her classmate Sophia Hayden Bennett (M.I.T. Class of 1890) both entered. Hayden won and Howe placed second. The prize money made it possible for her to take her mother and sisters to Europe. After fifteen months, Howe returned to Boston and worked as a part-time librarian in the M.I.T. School of Architecture. She received her first commission to build a house in 1894 and worked alone and with various partners until 1900. She then established her own firm.

Lois Lilley Howe concentrated on domestic architecture from the beginning of her architectural career. This emphasis continued when she became partners with Eleanor Manning O'Connor in 1913 and with Mary Almy in 1926. Her work with houses was often innovative. For example, an article about her experimental plaster work appeared in a 1907 issue of Architectural Review and Architectural Record. In another 1907 issue she gave advice about designing serving pantries for small houses. Lois Lilley Howe initiated Howe, Manning & Almy's (HM&A) use of the Colonial Revival Style for both building and renovating and stressed the need to research architectural details. Details of Old New England Houses was published in 1913 by Howe and Constance Fuller (M.I.T. Class of 1914).

The problems of urban housing concerned Howe enough to steer HM&A towards the development of small houses and of urban planning. She was on the Planning Committee for Architect's Small House Bureau and was a member of the Boston Society of Architect's Small House Service Bureau of the American Institute of Architects (A.I.A.). She also participated in the Committee on Small Houses for A.I.A. and was appointed to the Board of Directors of the Housing Association of Metropolitan Boston. The Housing Committees for both the M.I.T. Women's Association and the Business Women's Club were chaired by her as well.

Organizations concerned with housing problems represented only part of Lois Lilley Howe's activities. She supported women's educational opportunities as a member of the American Association of University Women and as the M.I.T. representative for the General Committee of the "Naples Table," which later became the Association to Aid Scientific Research by Women. In 1918, Howe was elected vice-president of the M.I.T. Women's Association and subsequently president. Her partner, Eleanor O'Connor, became the next president. Howe helped to found the Business Women's Club and she was part of the Organizing Committee for Technology Architects.

Professionally, she was a forerunner because there were few women architects at that time. In 1901, she became the first woman to be officially elected when Robert Swain Peabody sponsored her for membership in the A.I.A. She was also one of the first women admitted to the Boston Society of Architects. Perhaps her greatest honor came in 1931, when she was elected a Fellow of the A.I.A., the first woman to be chosen.

Lois Lilley Howe retired from HM&A in 1937, after practicing for more than forty years, but she never stopped working. After retirement, she occasionally worked on commissions for Eleanor O'Connor's private practice. She was also treasurer of the Old Cambridge Shakespeare Association, president of the Cambridge Plant Club, vice-president of the Cambridge Historical Society, and a member of the Cambridge Social Dramatic Club and various Unitarian Clubs. When she died in 1964, she was twelve days short of her hundredth birthday.

Eleanor Manning O’Connor (1884-1973)

Eleanor Manning (later O’Connor) was born in Lynn, Massachusetts, to Delia Josephine Grady and James Manning, a building contractor. Unlike Lois Lilley Howe and Mary Almy, Eleanor Manning O’Connor started studying at the M.I.T. School of Architecture after she finished high school. Upon completion of a thesis titled “Design for a Country Residence,” she received her S.B. degree in 1906. During her senior year, she served as president of Cleofan, the Institute’s club for women.

Two years after graduation Eleanor O’Connor started to work as a draftsman for Lois Lilley Howe. While in this position, O’Connor also did some private architectural commissions. Her classmate, Eliza J. Newkirk Rogers (M.I.T. class of 1905), helped with these commissions, and they may have entered into an informal partnership for a short period. When O’Connor took an extended leave of absence from Howe’s office in 1912, she went to Europe with Eliza Newkirk Rogers. Eleanor O’Connor cut her trip short in order to accept Howe’s offer of partnership.

During World War I, Eleanor O’Connor served on the Mayor’s Committee for an Open Air Canteen and on several committees for the Boston Army and Navy Canteen, a facility that Lois Lilley Howe & Manning built. She also chaired the Business Women's Club's Social Committee and was on the Ways and Means Committee for the Massachusetts Women's Suffrage Association.

Eleanor O'Connor started teaching after World War I. She was a Special Instructor of Architecture and then of Housing at Simmons College for fifty years. During the 1930's she also began to teach at three other schools: Pine Manor Junior College, Chamberlain School for Retailing, and Garland College. She was also involved in the College Club and the American Association of University Women (A.A.U.W.). Throughout her career, Eleanor O'Connor was a frequent lecturer and guest instructor in the New England area. In the 1940's, one of her major tasks as Housing Chairman of the Massachusetts Civic League was the development and implementation of one of the country's early Housing Management courses for housing specialists.

Eleanor Manning O'Connor's major professional concern was housing and urban planning. After World War I, the rise of middle-income families and the growth of the urban population created a need for more compact, less expensive housing. In addition to her work with HM&A, she was on both the Committee to Reclaim Areas for Better Housing and the Women's Committee on Membership for the Boston Housing Association. In her home town of Lynn, she served on the City Planning Board for seven years, starting in 1923; this position led to her role as secretary for the Massachusetts Federation of Planning Boards. She also attended the 1931 President's Conference on Home Building and Ownership, where she served on both the Design and the Kitchen Committees. In 1941, she served on the Committee on Housing the Family for the White House Conference on Children in a Democracy. Because of her ten year chairmanship of the Housing Committee for the Massachusetts Civic League, she was appointed to the Executive Committee of the New England Regional Council of the National Association of Housing Officials in 1944. She belonged to the Housing Association of Metropolitan Boston and to the Architect's Small House Service Bureau and served on Housing Committees for her non-architectural clubs, such as the A.A.U.W. and the Business Women's Club.

One of O'Connor's greatest honors as a housing expert was her partnership with the Seventeen Associated Architects. This select group of architects planned Old Harbor Village, the first low-cost housing project in Boston, with funding from the Public Works Administration. O'Connor worked with the Seventeen Associated Architects from 1933 to 1938, while continuing as a partner of HM&A.

After HM&A dissolved, Eleanor O'Connor went into private architectural practice. Her practice continued until at least 1959. Many of her commissions were with clients who once used HM&A. Home-building and renovating predominated, but she also designed for Providence Gas, the Garland School, the William Lawrence Camp, and the Fleur-de-Lis Camp.

Eleanor O'Connor kept close ties with architectural colleagues. She became a member of the A.I.A. in 1923 and the following year, attended the A.I.A. convention as a Boston

Society of Architect's (B.S.A.) delegate. She participated in various committees for the B.S.A., such as the Entertainment Committee and the Rogers Building Exhibit Committee, as well as serving as secretary for the Education Committee. She was also a member of the Massachusetts Association of Architects and the Society of Technology Architects.

O'Connor also continued her connections with M.I.T. From 1924 to 1926, she served as president of the M.I.T. Women's Association. Later, she was a member of Tech Dames and worked on the Rotch Scholarship Committee for the M.I.T. Alumni Association.

In 1931, Eleanor Manning became Johnson O'Connor's second wife; this marriage lasted until they died, within days of each other, in 1973. Johnson O'Connor founded the Human Engineering Laboratory (H.E.L.) and the Johnson O'Connor Research Foundation. Eleanor O'Connor traveled around the country with him visiting laboratories and served on the Board of Directors and as treasurer. She also designed laboratories and compiled architectural vocabularies for the H.E.L.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Johnson O'Connor Research Foundation and the Human Engineering Laboratory of Boston gave the Howe, Manning & Almy (HM&A) Collection to the M.I.T. Historical Collections in 1976; it was transferred to the Institute Archives in 1978. A grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities supported the processing of the collection.

Most of the papers were stored on the top floor of the O'Connor's home at 381 Beacon Street, and a few folders came from the Almy family papers that are in the Arthur and Elizabeth Schlesinger Library on the History of Women in America, Radcliffe College. It is unknown when and how the collection arrived at the O'Connor's home, but the papers were stored there for years. As a result, the collection required extensive preservation work. Because the original order was indiscernible, an artificial order was imposed upon the collection. The firm's files are incomplete, but no other records have been located.

The collection includes correspondence, financial data, reports, specifications, photographs, paintings, drawings, blueprints, diaries, notes, manuscripts, and printed material. This material is divided into five series.

- I. Howe, Manning & Almy Architectural Firm Files
- II. Mary Almy – Personal Papers
- III. Lois Lilley Howe – Personal Papers
- IV. Eleanor Manning O'Connor – Personal Papers
- V. Photographs

Series I and IV are further divided into subgroups because they form the bulk of the collection. The HM&A Architectural Firm Files compose thirteen linear feet and the personal papers Eleanor Manning O'Connor about six and a half linear feet. With the photographs and the personal papers of Lois Lilley Howe and of Mary Almy included, the HM&A collection totals twenty-one linear feet and has, in addition, one oversize box and fifty-four oversize folders of drawings and blueprints. These papers span the years from 1883 to 1973. A more detailed series description follows.

The collection was originally about sixty linear feet, but much of this material has been separated from the collection. The printed matter went to the appropriate M.I.T. libraries, and the women's personal photographs have been given to the M.I.T. Historical Collections. The Institute Archives returned about eight linear feet to the Human Engineering Laboratories including H.E.L. records, financial data of the O'Connor's, and personal papers of Ruth Davis O'Connor. One linear foot was given to the Boston Society of Architects because it consisted of Society records that did not involve HM&A.

I. HOWE, MANNING & ALMY ARCHITECTURAL FIRM FILES

A. General Firm Files

Little remains of the firm's correspondence and legal data that does not directly relate to their commission work. These remaining general records and correspondence of the firm have been drawn together in this section. Correspondence and information from organizations that had at least two of the partners as members are also in the general files. These organizations reflect some of the firm's architectural interests. For example, solutions to the problems of low-cost and urban housing were sought by the Architects Small House Service Bureau and by the Boston Housing Association. Architectural organizations were not the only mutual interests of the firm members, however. All three women were active in M.I.T. alumni groups, as well as in various professional women's clubs, such as the College Club, the Business Women's Club, and the American Association of University Women. Note that more organizational records are in Series II, III, and IV.

The general firm files also provide an idea of the publicity that H.M.&A. received from both the public and their colleagues. There are reprints from professional journals as well as articles from local newspapers and clippings about architectural interests.

B. Commission files

HM&A's files from their commission work is reconstructed, when possible, in this section. Some of the drawings and written material are unidentifiable, and are placed in front of the numbered commissions. The identification of commissions is based upon the list of job numbers that was found in the papers. The commissions are numbered consecutively, starting with work from Lois Lilley Howe's private practice and continuing until the firm disbanded in 1937. The earliest commission files date back to about 1894. Only about ten percent of Howe's private work remains, consisting primarily of linen drawings and tracings. The commission files for about forty-four percent of Lois Lilley Howe & Manning's work and for almost sixty-five percent of HM&A's work are in the collection. These percentages are sufficient to provide information about the firm's various types of architectural work.

The amount of information varies for each commission, and more data is present in the later commission files. Correspondence, financial data, specifications, reports, notes, drawings, tracings, blueprints, and photographs can all be found in the commission files. The files also include over five hundred rolled blueprints and tracings which have been cleaned, flattened, and placed in a map case. The folder list indicates the type of material available for each commission. Occasionally, assignment of a commission number was a guess.

The annotated job list containing the dates for many of the firm's commissions is appended to this guide.

C. Reference Files

The reference files in the collection reflect the extensive research that HM&A made to insure accurate plans. The three architects kept architectural postcards, design patterns, photographs, and drawings for reference purposes.

The measured drawings are of houses' interior details, especially in the colonial style. These drawings are from homes that the firm worked on and historic houses that the architects visited. The measured drawings were filed alphabetically by HM&A, but were not always well identified. A list of names and, when possible, dates and addresses is in folder number 546.

The firm kept loose-leaf notebooks on the work they did for clients on various aspects of architectural design. The photographs and printed material were removed from these notebooks and are maintained in their original order. Photographs of work for clients is alphabetical, but some of the notebooks are missing. Photographs and printed material about architectural details, such as doorways and roofs, compose the remainder of the visual reference files. These details are alphabetical by subject.

The collection also included a considerable amount of printed material that the partners probably kept for reference use. While the journals, newsletters, and books have been separated from the collection, their clipping file has been retained. Because this file is entirely composed of printed matter, it was transferred directly into three boxes. No preservation work has been done on this material, and there are no folder numbers for these boxes.

II. MARY ALMY – PERSONAL PAPERS

The collection contains only a small group of Almy's personal papers. Some of the material was transferred to the Institute Archives from the Schlesinger Library where the Almy Family Papers are located. The design plans Almy made for Radcliffe College Booths at the International Exhibition and at the Harvard Tercentary are in this series.

III. LOIS LILLEY HOWE – PERSONAL PAPERS

The personal papers of Lois Lilley Howe contain the earliest material of the collection. A few of her sketchbooks from the Museum School of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts are in this section. Sketchbooks, sketches, and watercolors of a later date are also present. The personal papers contain correspondence and information from organizations as well.

The collection also has two of Howe's architectural scrapbooks which contain many drawings from her early architectural work. The scrapbook's original order is intact. Few dates and no commission numbers are on the drawings; the client's name is usually present, however.

IV. ELEANOR MANNING O'CONNOR – PERSONAL PAPERS

A. General

Eleanor Manning O'Connor's personal papers form a large part of the HM&A collection because the collection came from her home and from the Human Engineering Laboratory. The first subgroup in her section consists of general material, including correspondence, engagement calendars, organizational data, notes, and newspaper clippings. The correspondence and the engagement calendars are in chronological order. The organizational data does not relate to O'Connor's architectural concerns.

B. Travel

Eleanor Manning O'Connor traveled extensively and recorded the trips through diaries and sketches. Her interest in architecture is reflected in the drawings and notes that are in this section. The material is arranged chronologically. Besides diaries and sketches, the travel section includes letters to her family during her first trip to Europe and information from later trips.

C. Seventeen Associated Architects, 1935-1940

Eleanor Manning O'Connor's partnership in Seventeen Associated Architects is an important aspect of her career. The architects used blueprints to disseminate information, such as financial data, and these copies are in this section along with correspondence, reports, contracts, and a newspaper clipping file about the group. O'Connor remained with HM&A while working with Seventeen Associated Architects; their agreement about this arrangement is also in this section.

D. Architectural Office Files

O'Connor did some private commission work before she became partners with Lois Lilley Howe, and went into private practice after HM&A disbanded. Her records are similar to HM&A's files that are in Series I; they include general correspondence, addresses, notes and a ledger. The bulk of her records consist of identified and unidentified commission files. The unidentified files include a few drawings by other architects that O'Connor probably referred to for her own work. Both a report and drawings for various Human Engineering Laboratories are also in the unidentified group. The numbered commissions start with three examples of O'Connor's earliest work. In her later practice, she continued with HM&A's numbering system for the commissions, the firm stopped at number 946 and O'Connor starts with commission 1000. The commission files include photographs, financial data, notes, reports, specifications, correspondence, tracings, blueprints, and printed material. The contents of each commission is indicated in the folder listing.

There was no complete job listing for O'Connor's private practice included in the collection, as a result, the exact commission number and the client's full name were not always available.

E. Professional Affiliations

Eleanor Manning O'Connor was active in many organizations. Her predominant affiliations are with groups concerned about housing. Her work for better housing and urban planning is well documented and shows her involvement on both the local and federal levels. This section also contains articles and notes from O'Connor's research on housing solutions. The associations are in alphabetical order and the general housing information and notes are at the end. Other records concerning organizations are in Series I.

F. Articles, Lectures, and Teaching Information

O'Connor's educational activities are documented in this section. Her articles and lectures are about architecture and housing. She taught at women's colleges in the Boston area and her course outlines, notes, lectures, exams, grades, reports, and correspondence are in this section of her personal papers. Her articles and lectures precede the unidentified course information and her teaching material from Chamberlain, Garland, Pine Manor, and Simmons College.

G. Book Drafts

Eleanor Manning O'Connor wrote a book that is an in-depth discussion of house-building. She included chapters on the history of housing, how to choose a site and obtain a plan, as well as details about excavating, plumbing, furnishing etc. Essentially a "how-to" book, it was probably started in 1928 and it was still being revised in 1942. The book was never published.

This section also includes the architectural vocabulary booklets that O'Connor compiled for the Human Engineering Laboratory.

H. Paintings

The collection includes a few watercolors and oils that Eleanor Manning O'Connor painted, usually during her trips to Europe. These paintings are of buildings and landscapes.

V. Photographs

Whenever possible, photographs of a specific commission are in the appropriate commission file. Some photographs could not be identified according to commission number, however, and these photos are in Series V. Completely unidentifiable photographs of houses and other buildings are at the end. Some of these may be pictures from the firm's own work; but most of them are historical houses or tourist shots of foreign buildings. These snapshots were probably used by HM&A for reference purposes.
